The Second Sunday of Lent, from ‘Divine Intimacy’ by Father Gabriel

The Transfiguration

...Today’s Gospel brings out the close connection between the Transfiguration and the Passion of Jesus. Moses and Elijah appeared on Mount Tabor on either side of the Savior. They conversed with Him, and as St. Luke explains, talked specifically about His coming Passion: “They spoke of His death, that He should accomplish in Jerusalem” (Lk 9,31).

The divine Master wished to teach His disciples in this way that it was impossible—for Him—as well as for them—to reach the glory of the Transfiguration without passing through suffering. It was the same lesson that He would give later to the two disciples at Emmaus...What has been disfigured by sin cannot regain its original supernatural beauty except by way of purifying suffering.

2. In ecstasy before the vision on Tabor, Peter cried out with his usual eagerness, “It is good for us to be here,” and offered to make three tabernacles: one for Jesus, one for Moses, and one for Elijah. But his proposal was interrupted by a voice from heaven: “This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, listen to Him!” and the vision disappeared.

Spiritual consolations are never an end in themselves, and we should neither desire them nor try to retain them for our own satisfaction. Joy, even that which is spiritual, should never be sought for itself... God does not console us for our entertainment but rather for our encouragement, for our strengthening, for the increase of our generosity in suffering for love of Him.

The vision disappeared; the Apostles raised their eyes and saw nothing...and with Jesus they came down from the mountain. This is what we must always seek and it must be sufficient for us: Jesus alone, God alone. Everything else—consolations, assistance, friendships (even spiritual ones), understanding, esteem, encouragement—may be good to the extent that God permits us to enjoy them. He very often makes use of them to encourage us in our weakness; but if, through certain circumstances, His divine hand takes all these things away, we should not be upset or disturbed. It is precisely at such times that we can prove to God more than ever—by deeds and not by words alone—that He is our All and that He alone is sufficient. On these occasions the loving soul finds itself in a position to give God one of the finest proofs of its love: to be faithful to Him, to trust in Him, and to persevere in its resolution to give all...
